

Instructions

1. The Star

Draw a star to represent God's rescue plan from creation. From the earliest moments of humanity, God's rescue plan continued shining through the generations. This star symbolizes that unbroken promise, stretching all the way from Adam's story into a new chapter. Though people left Eden, hope did not fade—God still intended to restore and bless humanity, one family at a time.

2. The Blooming Flower

Sketch flowers growing from the star to depict Adam's descendants, placing a prominent flower at the top for Abraham, showing how Adam's lineage expanded across centuries. Amid ordinary lives and challenges, God chose a faithful man named Abraham—called "the friend of God." This central flower at the top represents Abraham's pivotal role: through him, God's unfolding plan moved forward.

3. Abraham's Promise

Draw myriads of small flowers to show that Abraham received a promise of a son and countless descendants. God promised Abraham more descendants than the stars. Although this seemed impossible for a man of his age, he trusted the One who gives life to everything. His faith paved the way for a vast family, each generation carrying the hope of future rescue.

4. The test

Draw a ram's horns to illustrate the sacrifice. Abraham was tested by God and asked to sacrifice his son Isaac, but God intervened and gave him a ram. It was a test of faith and a foreshadowing of God's ultimate salvation plan where He would provide his own sacrifice. The covenant stood firm, echoing God's unwavering intention.

5. Desert Multitude

Draw flowers on the fingers to illustrate these descendants as a multitude in the desert. Beyond Abraham, a multitude of descendants emerged. Ishmael became the father of the powerful Arab peoples, and Isaac the father of the Israelites. They often lived in harsh desert landscapes, yet God's promise never failed.

6. The Saviour

Draw a star for the one who would eventually save the world, fulfilling God's promise. One day, from among these heirs, a savior would arrive to fulfill that ancient pledge—reminding us that from a single promise, a grand destiny was set in motion.
